How can Career Guidance/ Vocational Design/Career Counseling participate to these questions ?

Conclusion and recommendations

Despite the diversity of ongoing projects and initiatives, there are still few publications that demonstrate the effectiveness of these interventions (Silva, Soares, Bragança & Vautero, 2022).

Specificity of different groups of migrants (PALOPs, Refugees...) implies the study of specific needs and development of custom-made programs.

More collaboration is needed between governmental and local agencies with universities and research centres to develop, validate and disseminate good practices, and promote more training in career counselling with multicultural and vulnerable people.

How can Career Guidance/ Vocational Design/Career Counseling participate to these questions ?

Conclusion and recommendations

The career intervention could allow immigrants to integrate past career roles and experiences with current ones, whilst (re)building their career identity. As a result, individuals will gain a sense of hope and optimism regarding future options, and are more likely to better adjust to the host culture. At the same time, host countries will have more satisfied and involved employees, which may contribute to economic growth.
